M: Linda, what's wrong?

W: I couldn't focus on Professor Donaldson's lecture because of some disruptive students.

M: Why? Were they chatting during the lecture?

W: No. The problem was the sound of their typing when they were taking notes on their laptops. Something has to be done.

M: Laptops are more convenient and faster note-taking tools than handwriting.

W: But what about people who don't use laptops? Should we be distracted by the sound?

M: You sound quite upset.

W: And you know, they rarely make eye contact with the professor. They just look at their screens.

M: Linda, look at it from their side. They're probably looking up information they don't understand.

W: Well, who knows? I'm sure they're tempted to surf the Internet just for fun.

M: Hmm... I can't deny that.

W: The next stop on our tour is this model kitchen from Pompeii.

M: Good! Actually, I read a magazine article about Pompeii last month.

W: What was it about?

M: I don't remember much, but it talked about how some things haven't changed that much over time.

W: That's right. In the kitchen, the pots and pans are almost identical to the ones we use today.

M: So... were their kitchens the same as ours?

W: No, their kitchens were smaller and simpler than ours, and they cooked on tripods.

M: Is that the tripod? It doesn't look very convenient. I prefer my kitchen's gas stove and microwave.

W: They definitely didn't have those! Instead, most people used charcoal for cooking, but those who couldn't afford it used wood.

M: Where did the smoke go?

W: Do you see that opening? That's the chimney. It let the smoke out and the rain in.

M: Why would they let the rain in?

W: They collected the water for cooking and bathing.

M: Oh, yeah! I remember reading something about that.

What is the man most likely to do on his birthday?

- ① To go to Mexico
- ② To go cliff diving
- ③ To go skydiving
- ④ To go paragliding

[script]

W: You look a bit sad. What happened?

M: I can't believe I'm turning 30 next week!

W: Cheer up! You look younger than your age. Are you celebrating your birthday in some way?

M: I'm thinking about doing something that will make me feel like a young man again.

W: Maybe you should take a trip to Mexico. That would be great.

M: I have no time for that, but it does give me an idea. They do a lot of cliff diving in Mexico. Maybe I can do that here.

W: But we don't have any deep water to dive into.

M: Good point. I could go skydiving instead. There're lots of places to do that here.

W: What about paragliding? I've heard it's lots of fun and less dangerous.

M: Well, it's not a bad idea, but I like my idea better.

According to the talk, which place is the Audience Hall?

Hampshire Palace

[script]

M: Welcome to Hampshire Palace! This palace was built about 500 years ago. Before we enter the palace, let me briefly explain where the buildings are located. When you pass through the gate, you will see a courtyard. On your right, you'll find a kitchen building where 900 cooks prepared food. And there's the Council Chamber on your left. The leading officials discussed important issues there. At the end of the courtyard, the second gate leads into another courtyard. Passing through that courtyard, you'll encounter the Audience Hall, where the king received foreign ambassadors. Behind that building, there's a library which still has over 7,000 manuscripts. Now, are you ready to go?

Why is the woman calling the man?

- ① To ask him to encourage her son
- ② To ask him about her son's math grade
- ③ To ask how her son is doing in his new class
- ④ To ask him to transfer her son to another class

[Phone rings.]

M: Rosemary High School.

W: Hello. May I speak to Mr. Smith?

M: Speaking.

W: Hi, I'm Mary Baker, John's mother. There's something I'd like to discuss with you.

M: Hi, Mrs. Baker. Please, go ahead.

W: I don't think John's adjusting well to his new math class. I'm wondering if it's possible to put him back in the previous class.

M: Really? But we put him in the advanced math class based on his achievement.

W: I know, but he's having a hard time catching up with the other students. He's lost all his confidence.

M: I see, but before I take any action, I need to talk to his math teacher.

W: OK. When do you think I can hear back from you?

M: I'll try to talk to her this afternoon and call you back.

W: Great! Thanks.

W: I'm really thirsty.

M: Here, I have some water. Drink as much as you like.

W: Thanks. I've never seen this kind before. Where did you buy it?

M: I didn't buy it. It's tap water. I'm just reusing the bottle.

W: You drink tap water? Is it safe?

M: Our local tap water is strictly monitored, so it's clean and tasty.

W: Really? But I'd rather buy bottled water even if it does cost more.

M: Bottled water is a waste of money. Besides, I heard that our community received an award for its water purification system.

W: Did they? Oh, I didn't know that.

M: The quality of our tap water is as good as bottled water. You can trust me.

W: If you say so. Well, I'll give it a try.

What did the man ask the woman to do?

- ① To see a horror movie
- ② To take pictures of him
- ③ To run with him in the marathon
- ④ To put pictures up on the Internet

[script]

M: Do you have any plans for tomorrow?

W: I'm thinking of seeing a horror movie with my friend.
What about you?

M: I'm running a marathon. I'm hoping to be able to complete the full course.

W: Wow! Sounds terrific. That'll be a challenge.

M: I am expecting it to be quite tough. I might even have to quit in the middle, but I'll try my best to finish.

W: I'll come with you if you want. I can welcome you at the finish line.

M: That'd be great. Then, can you bring your camera and take some photos of me?

W: No problem. I'll try to get some great action shots and email them to you.

M: Thanks a lot. I can put them up on the Internet afterward.

W: Good luck and see you tomorrow.

According to the talk, how many seconds do drivers typically spend waiting at traffic signals in urban areas?

- ① 6 seconds
- ② 8 seconds
- ③ 15 seconds
- ④ 50 seconds

[script]

M: Have you ever thought about how damaging it is to the environment to leave your car running at red lights? The best way to help is to simply stop doing this whenever possible. The Office of Energy recommends drivers shut off their engines if they must stop even for just 6 seconds. This not only consumes less fuel, but also reduces the emissions that cause global warming. The average time most drivers spend waiting at red lights in urban areas is 8 seconds. This wait can even exceed 50 seconds in some areas. So, by simply turning your engine off and then restarting it, you can help reduce air pollution.
